

Subject: Copyright Liability

From: Dennis Watson (dennis_watson100@hotmail.com)

Sent: December 3, 2007

To: brian.canfield@telus.com; dick.auchinleck@telus.com; charles.baillie@telus.com; micheline.bouchard@telus.com; john.butler@telus.com; pierre.ducros@telus.com; ruston.goepel@telus.com; john.lacey@telus.com; brian.macneill@telus.com; ronald.triffo@telus.com; donald.woodley@telus.com

Greetings,

Please advise as to who speaks for, represents and assumes the legal liability for TELUS Corporation. Would that be, Darren Entwistle, David Wotherspoon, Ronald Lopez or the Board of Directors? All of the above? Please advise.

Is it true that TELUS Corporation has claimed copyright on the attached two pictures? One of a lady gagged and tied to a chair. The other of a man pointing to a bulge in his pants? Please advise how this fits in with TELUS' Corporate image.

The attached copyright claim by David Wotherspoon states that TELUS claims copyright to those pictures. Please advise why TELUS would claim copyright to those pictures. What basis and in what context do they claim they are copyrighted by TELUS Corporation?

Is it true that TELUS Corporation has claimed copyright on TELUS Idol? The attached court application by Ronald Lopez in San Francisco claims that it is TELUS not Darren Entwistle who is claiming copyright to TELUS Idol. Please advise if that is a true statement. Does the Board of Directors assume legal liability for the content of that training video collectively or as individuals as well?

Since my counterclaim is currently before the courts, I need to know who accepts legal liability for TELUS Idol and all those screen shots. Please advise as to the Board of Directors role on the legal liability of this matter.

Perhaps it is time to try something new. The stock has peaked, the Bell merger failed and dissension is off the charts. Perhaps we should go back to the old ways of hard work and customer satisfaction. Perhaps it is time to cut Darren Entwistle loose and give a new CEO a new mandate.

If TELUS brings back the work from the off shore call centres like AT&T as well as other large telecommunication companies, I will drop my political campaign against TELUS. My word is my bond. Cheers.

Dennis Watson – Defendant

